

agrarian country	many people living simple lives in the countryside in a rural environment
urban environment	Cities, towns and surrounding areas
mechanisation	The building of many machines.
transformed	Enormous changes.
resorts	A place designed for people to go on holiday.
bathing machine	A wheeled hut drawn to the edge of the sea, used for changing in.
promenade	a paved public walk, typically one along the seafront at a resort

Queen Victoria was the monarch who reigned over the United Kingdom from 1837-1901.

Year Two History By The Seaside The Victorians

History is the study of the past, in particular changes over time.

Chronology

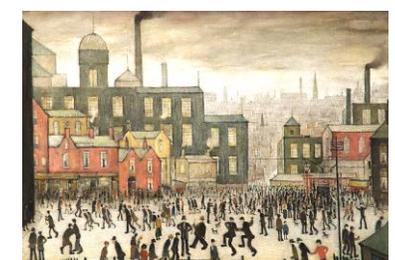

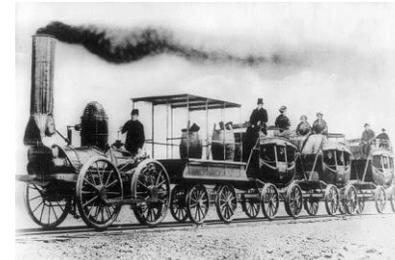

The order in which events happened.

Before Victorian times only wealthy people could afford to go on holiday.

The invention of the steam trains meant that during Victorian times more people could go on holiday to the seaside because it was fast and cheap.

Before the Victorian times Britain was an agrarian country with many people living simple lives in the countryside in a rural environment.

During the Victorian era many people moved to urban environments: they lived in towns and cities and worked in factories.

The Victorian era was a time of significant change due to mechanisation (the building of many machines). The changes that happened were so big that we can say that Britain transformed.

While at the seaside, people enjoyed walking on the pier or promenade; taking a tram or trolley cart ride; bathing in the sea; sailing model boats; sailing on sailing boats; building in sandcastles; watching brass bands, circus shows or puppet shows such as Punch and Judy.

machines

